Contract Management Data Model

This document presents the business scope and logical data model for third-party IT, cloud and SaaS contracts. It moves from the business problem to the objects, domains and concepts needed to manage contract data, then provides the full data dictionary.

M&A Operating System — AI & Data Advisory Practice

M&A Operating System (MAOS) helps organizations turn data into measurable business outcomes.

Our AI & Data Advisory Practice works with senior business, data, analytics, and technology leaders to improve how their organizations use information to grow revenue, understand customers, make better decisions, reduce operating cost, manage risk, and enable analytics and AI.

Most organizations do not lack data. They struggle to turn the data they already have into information the business can consistently trust and use. Customer information is fragmented, reports disagree, data is repeatedly copied and transformed, and business definitions vary across teams. Analytics and AI initiatives then inherit the same problems.

We start with the business outcome and work backwards to the information, architecture, governance, operating model, and technology changes required to achieve it. That may mean improving customer identity to support segmentation and personalization, creating more reliable management information, simplifying complex data flows, or establishing the trusted business context required for AI.

Our work typically includes:

- Improving customer identity, segmentation, personalization, and revenue-growth capabilities
- Solving complex data management and data content design issues for Legal Entity, Beneficial Owner, People, Securities, Product Definition and transactional data
- Creating more consistent, timely, and trusted information for reporting, analytics, forecasting, and decision-making
- Designing and maintaining business-aligned data models for operational, analytical, and AI needs
- Resolving data quality, reliability, and performance issues caused by complex data flows, fragmented connectivity, duplication, and uncontrolled data propagation
- Establishing trusted views of customers, legal entities, products, accounts, agreements, and other critical business subjects
- Simplifying data architectures and reducing unnecessary movement, duplication, and technology complexity
- Establishing practical data governance, ownership, and AI readiness aligned to business priorities

Our goal is not simply to modernize data technology. It is to make information work better for the business.

The value of a data program should ultimately be measured by what the business can do better because of it.

About the M&A Operating System Practical Data Modelling Approach

The M&A Operating System Practical Data Modelling Approach is our proprietary, business-led methodology for translating business outcomes and challenges into data requirements and approved logical data models.

We engage business stakeholders and data-consuming groups to understand what they expect data services to make possible. Their needs are captured as plain-English business requirements, then translated through a controlled, traceable sequence of analysis and design activities. The methodology deliberately avoids overly technical terminology and modelling techniques, presenting the information in a business-readable, plain-English form. The resulting data modelling document follows the same sequence, allowing business stakeholders and data practitioners to understand, challenge, and approve the design.

The Five-Step Process

Step 1 — Gather and Approve Business Requirements

We identify the outcomes stakeholders expect, the challenges they need to solve, and the business activities that data services must support. These are documented as plain-English requirements and approved as the scope and source of knowledge for the design.

Step 2 — Identify Actors, Objects, and Roles

Using Subject-Based Data Modelling, we identify the actors, roles, and objects in the business lifecycle and map them to domains representing the immutable subjects of the data. Domains describe the enduring people, organizations, things, places, and other subjects the business needs to understand—not the specific reason they appear in a single process.

Actors and objects are aligned to their underlying mastered subjects. Roles describe the capacity in which a subject participates in a relationship, process, or context. The same subject can perform several roles without being modelled repeatedly.

Step 3 — Identify Relationships

We identify the relationships between actors and objects and express them as clear business verbs—such as owns, manages, supplies, purchases, or is party to. This makes their meaning understandable and reviewable by business and data stakeholders.

Step 4 — Identify Lifecycle Events

We identify the events that actors, roles, and objects pass through as they live their natural lives and interact within business processes. These events include when an object is created, changed, activated, transferred, or retired; a subject assumes or ceases a role; or a relationship is established, modified, or ended. This determines what data must be captured at each stage.

Step 5 — Design Logical Data Models

The approved requirements, subjects, roles, relationships, and lifecycle events form the logical data model, documented through four connected components:

- Data Domains — governed groupings representing the immutable subjects of the data
- Data Concepts — the unique logical elements that make up the data known and recorded about each subject
- Data Relationships — the business connections between concepts, including the roles they perform
- Data Attributes — the individual data elements that describe each concept or relationship

Each component remains traceable to the requirement that established its need. The completed document provides the shared record business stakeholders and data practitioners use to review and approve the data requirements and model design.

1 Business Scope

A buyer organisation acquires IT, cloud and SaaS services from third-party providers under written agreements, and must know at any date what each executed agreement obliges, permits, costs and protects, and be able to show the words in the signed original that say so.

In scope

ID	Business scope
SCI001	The executed agreement as an original artefact (the signed PDF) with its renditions, execution status and signature evidence
SCI002	The documents that make up an agreement: master agreement, order forms and statements of work, schedules, amendments, renewals and successor agreements, and terms incorporated by reference from the provider's website
SCI003	The parties to an agreement and what each is to it: service provider, signing recipient, consuming entity, subcontractor, data processor, signatory and internal owner
SCI004	The clauses of an agreement classified against a governed clause taxonomy, and the rights, obligations and prohibitions they create
SCI005	The service definition: contracted services, ICT service type, deployment model, service levels, service credits, data locations, security, resilience and audit terms
SCI006	Commercial and risk-allocation terms: fees, licence metrics and quantities, pricing and price change, payment, liability caps and heads of loss, indemnities and insurance
SCI007	Lifecycle terms: effective and expiry dates, renewal, notice, termination rights, change regime for online terms, exit and data return
SCI008	Evidence of each structured term: the clause, page, words and extraction method in the executed original, and whether a reviewer has verified it

2 Object Model

The object model separates the commercial arrangement from the instruments and files that evidence it. Collections organize the arrangement. Documents represent independently identifiable instruments. A Document Version is subordinate to exactly one Document and represents a substantive state or edition of that Document; it is not a separate legal instrument. Files represent stored renditions of a Version.

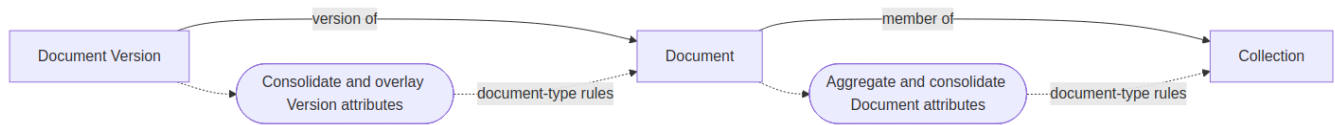

Object	Business meaning	Examples
Collection	A governed grouping administered as one arrangement or sub-arrangement.	Provider relationship, framework agreement, order, statement of work
Document	One independently identifiable legal or operational instrument.	MSA, order form, amendment, DPA, SLA, notice
Document Version	A substantive state or published edition of the same Document.	Draft, redline, agreed form, executed version, online edition
File	A stored rendition of one Document Version.	Signed PDF, native file, OCR copy, web snapshot
Legal Entity	A company or other legal person participating in an arrangement.	Provider, customer entity, subcontractor, processor
Person	An individual acting in relation to a contract.	Signatory, contract owner
Contracted Service	The agreement-specific service purchased from a provider.	Cloud hosting, SaaS subscription, managed service
Clause and Citation	The provision and source evidence supporting a structured term.	Clause number, page, quoted words, verification

Attribute consolidation and roll-up

Business attributes may be recorded at Collection, Document or Document Version level. The value made available at a parent level is a logical consolidation and overlay of the applicable values held at that level and at the levels beneath it. A Collection can therefore present a consolidated view of its member Documents and their Versions, while a Document can present the applicable view across its Versions.

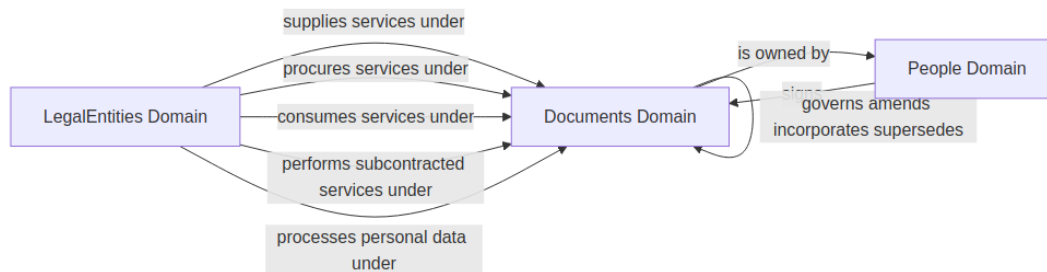

Roll-up does not move, duplicate or overwrite the source facts. Every consolidated value must remain traceable to the Collection, Document or Version at which it was recorded. The consolidation, precedence, conflict-resolution and aggregation rules must be defined by document type because different instruments treat dates, parties, monetary terms, obligations and status differently. Where no valid rule exists, the model must preserve the distinct source values rather than manufacture a single answer.

3 Domain Model

The model requires three enterprise domains. Service Provider, Customer, Consumer, Subcontractor, Processor, Signatory and Contract Owner are roles established by relationships; they are not separate masters.

Domain	Anchor subject	Scope in this model
Documents	Document	A single document that evidences or forms part of an agreement: for an executed agreement, the executed original as signed, together with what it states. Extended from 'basic details about a single document including its name, type, brief description and link' to hold execution status, dates and the fingerprint of the executed original.
LegalEntities	LegalEntity	Reused as held in DDA: the primary concept for all legal entities.
People	Person	Reused as held in DDA: fundamental information about a real person.

4 Concept Model

The Documents domain contains the concepts needed to describe documentary evidence, lifecycle, commercial terms, services, risk allocation, data protection and continuing obligations. Document Versions are subordinate to Documents and sit between Document and Document Files. Recursive Document composition supports Collections containing Documents and subordinate Collections. The LegalEntities domain adds supplier profile, corporate relationship, governance, risk, performance, financial, compliance, intelligence, strategy, action and QBR concepts derived from the supplier profile template. Contract-specific dates, values, renewal terms and service levels remain in the Documents domain and can be consolidated into supplier views without being duplicated. Portfolio annual spend, contract expiry and heatmap zone are logical views derived from the underlying contract, assessment and health data. Attributes recorded at Version, Document and Collection level participate in the governed logical roll-up described in the Object Model.
